MA Randall's death had been expected at any time during the past three days and his family and friends knew that he could not last much longer. The physicians had informed the family that death might come at most any hour and Sunday night they told Mrs. Randall that his endurance could not prolong his life through another day. Friday night had been a bad one for the sick man and he had several sinking spells, from which he rallied, to the astonishment of his physicians. These, however, left him weaker and when Saturday morning came it was evident that his extraordinary vitality had almost left him. He rested easily and comfortably during the forepart of the on Expenditures in the Treasury Departday and the doctor was encouraged to hope that he might live several days yet. He took some nourishment and dozed off without difficulty. Shortly after three o'clock, however, a marked change was noticed in his appearance and he seemed almost to sink away. This spell was worse than any of the preceding ones and it was thought that the end was at hand. All the members of the family were present, and also Dr. Mallan, who had attended Mr. Randall throughout his illness, and who had grown to have an interest in the case almost as great as one of the family. Dr. M. S. Lincoln, the consulting physician, and Postmaster-General Wanamaker were hastily summoned. They remained around the bedside expecting each moment would be the last until six o'clock, when he rallied some from the state of collapse. It left him with very little strength remaining and Dr. Mallan be- the reduction of the expenditures of the came convinced he could hardly live through the night. Dr. Lincoln left soon after six o'clock, but others remained with the sick man. There was little or no change up to midnight, except that he was steadily growing weaker. Young Sammy Randall went to a neighbor's house to sleep, but was hastily summoned about three o'clock in the morning, when the doctor informed the family that Mr. Ranndall could not live through the night. He was in a state of semi-unconsciousness most of the time. About 3:30 o'clock he had another sinking spell and afterward his mind became more clear and
